

THE LION
&
THE MOUSE

One day, in a deep green jungle, a mighty lion named Malik rested beneath a large tree.

His golden mane shone under the sunlight, and he stretched his powerful paws as he yawned.

As he drifted into sleep, a tiny mouse named Nabeel scurried through the grass, searching for food.

Without realizing it, Nabeel ran across Malik's paw.

The lion's eyes snapped open.

With a loud roar, he trapped the little mouse beneath his claws.

"Who dares to disturb my rest?"

Malik growled.

Nabeel trembled with fear.

"Please, O King of the Jungle, let me go! I am small and weak—I meant no harm."

Malik chuckled.

"You are too tiny to be of any use to me. Why should I let you go?"

"Because kindness is never wasted," Nabeel pleaded.

"Perhaps one day, I can help you in return."

Malik laughed loudly.

"You? Help me? Impossible!"

But something in Nabeel's words softened the lion's heart.

With a gentle shake of his paw, he let the little mouse go.

"Be careful next time," Malik said, still amused.

Days later, as the sun set over the jungle, hunters crept into the forest.

They set a large net trap between the trees, hoping to capture a lion.

That very night, Malik walked into the trap!

The net snapped shut, and he roared in anger.

He struggled and pulled, but the ropes were too strong.

Hearing the lion's mighty roar,
Nabeel rushed to the scene.

"Hold on, O King! I will help you!"
the little mouse squeaked.

Malik sighed in despair.

"How can a tiny creature like you free me?"

But Nabeel did not waste time.

He quickly gnawed at the thick ropes with his sharp teeth.

Little by little, the net began to loosen.

With one final bite, the rope snapped, and the lion was free!

Malik stood tall, shaking off the remaining ropes.

He looked down at Nabeel, his eyes filled with gratitude.

"Today, you have taught me an important lesson," Malik said humbly.

"No one is too small to help another. Even the mightiest may need the weakest."

Nabeel smiled proudly.

As they walked side by side, the jungle echoed with the wisdom of their story.

The Prophet ﷺ said: 'Whoever is not merciful to people, Allah will not be merciful to him.'

(Bukhari & Muslim)

From that day on, Malik and Nabeel became true friends, proving that kindness always finds its way back to the giver.

Moral:

Kindness is never wasted. No one is too small to make a difference, and true strength lies in helping others.

Poem Version

Upon the jungle's leafy bed,
A lion rested,
mighty spread.

His golden mane,
so thick and bright, Glowed beneath the morning light.

A tiny mouse
ran far and wide,
And on the lion's paw
he skied!

With sudden roar
and mighty leap,
The lion woke from peaceful sleep.

"You dare to wake the jungle's king?"
"What help can such a weak thing bring?"

"Please spare my life,"
the mouse replied,
"Perhaps one day, I'll stand beside!"

The lion laughed
but let him go,
Not knowing what the world would show.

Days passed, and hunters set their net,
A trap for lions—dark and set.

That very night,
Malik fell—
A mighty beast
now trapped as well.

He roared and pulled,
but tight it stayed,
The jungle hushed,
the trees all swayed.

Then from the grass,
with heart so true,
The little mouse came to the rescue!

With tiny teeth,
he chewed with might,
Until the ropes fell loose that night.

The lion stood,
his heart now wise—
"You've saved me, friend!
A great surprise!"

"No one's too small,
no one's too weak,
For Allah loves
the kind and meek."

So side by side,
the two then walked,
And of their tale,
the jungle talked.

For kindness grows
and spreads anew,
And mercy comes to those who do.

REFLECTIONS

Why did Malik first think that Nabeel was too small to be useful?

How did Nabeel prove that even the smallest creatures can help?

What does Islam teach us about showing kindness to others?

Can you think of a time when someone unexpected helped you?

How can we practice kindness and mercy in our daily lives?

This image shows a full page of blank, lined paper. It features approximately 20 evenly spaced horizontal grey lines across its entire surface, typical of notebook or school paper. There are no margins, text, or other markings present.

DEAR ALLAH,

This image shows a blank sheet of white paper with horizontal ruling lines. The lines are evenly spaced and extend across the width of the page. There are no margins, text, or other markings on the paper.

SINCERELY,

THE CROW

&

THE PITCHER

One hot summer day, a thirsty crow named Ameen flew over the dry desert, searching for water.

The scorching sun blazed above, and the land below was cracked and dry.

His wings grew heavy, and his throat felt parched.

"Ya Allah," he whispered, "I need water, or I will not survive."

Just then, Ameen spotted a tall clay jug sitting near an abandoned tent.

He flapped his wings excitedly and landed beside it.

Peering inside, he saw water at the bottom! But the jug's neck was too narrow, and his beak couldn't reach the water.

Ameen tried to tip the jug over,
but it was too heavy.

He pushed, pulled, and pecked—but nothing worked.

Feeling frustrated, he almost gave up.

But then, he paused and thought.

"Allah gives wisdom to those who seek it," he reminded himself.

"There must be a way!"

Looking around, he noticed small pebbles on the ground.

An idea sparked in his mind!

He picked up a pebble in his beak and dropped it into the jug.

Then another.

And another.

Slowly, the water began to rise!

Pebble by pebble, Ameen worked patiently, trusting that his effort would lead to success.

Finally, the water reached the top, and Ameen drank deeply, thanking Allah for guiding him.

"And whoever relies upon Allah—then He is sufficient for him."

(Qur'an 65:3)

As he flew away, refreshed and strong, Ameen smiled.

He had learned a valuable lesson: when faced with a challenge, do not give up—think, work hard, and trust in Allah's plan.

Moral:

Wisdom, patience, and effort lead to success. Trust in Allah, and He will guide you to a solution.

Poem Version

The desert burned,
the air was dry,
A crow flew low beneath the sky.

His throat was parched,
his wings were weak,
"Oh, where is water?"
he cried in seek.

Upon the sand,
a jug stood tall,
With water deep—but hard to haul.

The crow looked in,
but oh, too tight!
His beak could not reach down the height.

He pushed, he pulled,
he tried his best,
Yet not a drop met his request.

Then pausing deep in thought, he knew—
"There must be something I can do!"

He saw some pebbles
near the land,
And picked them up with beak and hand.

One by one,
he dropped them in,
And watched the water rise within!

At last, he drank
with heart so bright, Refreshed and strong,
his wings took flight.

"For Allah guides
the hearts that strive,
With patience, wisdom,
and faith alive!"

REFLECTIONS

Why couldn't Ameen drink from the jug at first?

What mistake did Ameen almost make before he thought of a solution?

How does Islam teach us to approach challenges with wisdom and effort?

Can you think of a time when patience and thinking helped you solve a problem?

How can we trust in Allah while also working hard?

This image shows a full page of blank, lined paper. It features approximately 20 evenly spaced horizontal grey lines across the entire width of the page, typical of notebook or primary writing paper. There are no margins, text, or other markings present.

DEAR ALLAH,

This image shows a blank sheet of white paper with horizontal ruling lines. The lines are evenly spaced and extend across the width of the page. There are approximately 20 lines visible. The paper has a slightly textured appearance.

SINCERELY,

THE ANT
&
THE GRASSHOPPER

On a bright summer day, in a meadow full of flowers, a hardworking ant named Ameen carried grains of wheat back to his home.

Step by step, he worked tirelessly, storing food for the winter.

Nearby, a cheerful grasshopper named Zayd sat under the shade of a large tree, singing and playing his flute.

"Ameen, why do you work so hard?" Zayd laughed.

"The sun is shining, and there's plenty of food everywhere!"

Ameen paused and smiled.

"My friend, summer will not last forever. Soon, the cold winds will come, and food will be scarce. I must prepare while I can."

Zayd chuckled.

"Why worry about tomorrow?
Allah will provide!"

He hopped away, playing his flute and enjoying the warm sun.

Days turned into weeks, and summer faded into autumn.

Then came the cold, harsh winds of winter.

The trees became bare, the grass dried up, and the rivers froze.

Food was nowhere to be found.

Zayd shivered in the cold, his stomach growling.

He hopped from place to place, looking for food, but found nothing.

Finally, he reached Ameen's warm and cozy home.

Inside, the ant sat comfortably with his family, enjoying the food he had stored.

Zayd knocked on the door, his voice weak. "Ameen, please help me. I am cold and hungry."

Ameen sighed and let him in.

He gave Zayd some food and wrapped him in a warm leaf.

"Zayd, my friend, Allah provides, but He also teaches us to work hard and plan for the future.

The Prophet ﷺ said: 'Tie your camel and trust in Allah.'

(Tirmidhi)

This means we must put in effort while also relying on Allah's blessings."

Zayd lowered his head in shame.

"I was foolish. I wasted my time instead of preparing for what was ahead."

Ameen smiled kindly.

"Now you have learned. Next year, work hard, and you will never go hungry again."

From that day on, Zayd balanced work and rest, learning that true reliance on Allah includes effort and gratitude.

And when summer returned, he sang a new song—one of wisdom and hard work.

Moral:

Effort and planning bring success. Trust in Allah, but also work hard, for He blesses those who strive.

Poem Version

Beneath the sun,
so warm and bright,
An ant worked hard from morning to night.

He carried grains,
both near and far, Preparing for the days bizarre.

Upon a leaf,
a grasshopper lay,
He played his flute
and laughed all day.

"Oh Ameen,
come rest with me!
"Why work so hard?
Just live carefree!"

The ant replied
with voice so wise,
"The winter comes with stormy skies."

"I work today
so I may eat,
And not go cold or lack in wheat."

The grasshopper grinned and shook his head,
"Why worry now?"—
that's all he said.

He danced and played the days away, While Ameen worked and stored his hay.

But soon the winds
began to blow,
The trees stood bare,
the land lost glow.

The grasshopper,
now weak and cold,
Had no more food,
nor warmth to hold.

He hopped and knocked upon a door,
Where grains were kept and warmth was sure.

"Oh Ameen,
please help me now!"
"I should have worked, but knew not how!"

The ant then smiled and let him in,
And gave him food—so warm within.

"Allah provides,
but don't forget,
To work as well,
no need to fret!"

"For faith is best
with effort too,
And wisdom guides
in all we do!"

So when the summer came once more,
The grasshopper worked and played—not poor!

He learned his lesson,
wise and true,
To work and trust in Allah too.

REFLECTIONS

Why did Ameen work hard while Zayd played?

What happened when winter came,
and how did it affect Zayd?

What does Islam teach us about balancing trust in Allah with effort?

Can you think of a time when hard work helped you in the future?

How can we plan wisely while still enjoying life?

This image shows a full page of blank, lined paper. It features approximately 20 evenly spaced horizontal grey lines running across the width of the page, providing a guide for handwriting or typing. The background is a clean, off-white color.

DEAR ALLAH,

This image shows a blank sheet of white paper with horizontal ruling lines. The lines are evenly spaced and extend across the width of the page. There are approximately 20 lines visible. The paper has a slightly textured appearance.

SINCERELY,

THE BUNDLE OF STICKS

Once upon a time, in a quiet village surrounded by tall palm trees, there lived an old man named Hassan.

He had three sons—Ali, Omar, and Bilal—who were always arguing.

One day, their father grew tired of their fights.

"My sons, come here," he called.

When they gathered around him, Hassan handed each son a single stick.

"Break it," he said.

Each son snapped the stick easily.

Then, Hassan tied a bundle of sticks together and gave it to Ali.

"Now, break this."

Ali tried and failed.

Omar and Bilal took turns, but no matter how hard they tried, they could not break the bundle.

Their father smiled.

"Do you see, my sons? A single stick is weak, but together they are strong."

"This is how you must be. If you stay divided, others will defeat you easily. But if you stand together, no one can break you."

He placed a hand on each of their shoulders and said,

"The Prophet ﷺ said: 'The believers are like a solid structure, supporting each other.'

(Bukhari & Muslim)"

Ali, Omar, and Bilal looked at each other and understood.

From that day on, they worked together instead of fighting, and their bond as brothers grew stronger than ever.

Moral:

Unity is strength. When we stand together, we are stronger than when we are alone.

Poem Version

A father wise,
both kind and strong,
Had three young sons,
who got along.

But only when,
the day was bright,
For soon they'd argue,
shout, and fight.

"My sons," he called,
"Come close to me,
A lesson now,
you all must see."

He handed them
a stick, so thin,
"Now break it fast, and let's begin."

Each snapped their stick,
with ease and cheer,
Their father smiled
and said, "Now here!"

He tied a bundle,
firm and tight,
"Now break it,
use your greatest might!"

They tried, they strained,
they huffed and bent,
But not a single stick,
was spent.

"A single stick,
is weak alone,
But tied as one,
their strength has grown!"

"So be as brothers,
firm and true,
Let no one break,
the bond in you."

"For Allah loves,
the hearts that stand, Together, strong,
just like this band!"

REFLECTIONS

Why was it easy to break one stick but not the bundle?

What lesson was the father trying to teach his sons?

What does Islam say about standing together as a community?

Can you think of a time when teamwork helped you succeed?

How can we apply this lesson in our daily lives with family and friends?

[illegible]

DEAR ALLAH,

This image shows a single page of white paper with horizontal blue or grey ruling lines. The lines are evenly spaced and run across the width of the page. There are approximately 20 lines visible. The paper has a slightly textured appearance.

SINCERELY,

THE TORTOISE
&
THE BIRDS

In a peaceful valley surrounded by green hills and fluttering trees, a tortoise named Tareq lived in the shade of a fig tree.

He was known for his slow and steady nature—and for his quiet, grateful heart.

But as the days grew hot and the earth began to dry, Tareq looked up longingly at the sky.

High above, flocks of birds soared freely, dipping and gliding through the clouds.

Among them were two friendly geese, Bashir and Basma, who often flew down to rest near Tareq's fig tree.

"You are so blessed," Tareq sighed one afternoon.

"To rise above the earth and see what I never can."

Bashir replied kindly, "Allah has made every creature with its own gift. You have your patience, we have our wings."

But Tareq's heart began to change.

He didn't just admire the birds—
he began to envy them.

"If only I could fly, everyone would praise me!" he muttered.

One day, he shared a daring idea with the geese.

"Will you help me fly? We could use a strong stick—you each hold one end in your beaks, and I'll bite the middle and hang on."

Basma hesitated.

"We can try, but you must promise—do not open your mouth. Not even once."

"I promise," Tareq said eagerly.

With that, the geese gripped the stick tightly and soared into the sky, Tareq dangling in the middle, clamped tight with his jaws.

Villagers below pointed in amazement.

"SubhanAllah! A flying tortoise!"

Tareq's heart swelled with pride.
"They're all amazed because of me!"

He wanted to shout: "It was my idea!"

But the moment he opened his mouth—he let go of the stick.

Down, down he fell...

With a thud, Tareq landed in a soft patch of sand, dizzy but unharmed.

The geese circled back and landed beside him.

"You broke your promise," Bashir said gently.

"And your pride nearly cost you your life."

Tareq bowed his head.

"You're right. I let arrogance rise with me. I should have remembered that everything I am comes from Allah, not from the praise of people."

From that day on, Tareq remained grounded—not just on the earth, but in his heart as well.

“Do not turn your face away from people in arrogance, nor walk proudly on the earth. Indeed, Allah does not like the arrogant and boastful.”

(Qur'an 31:18)

Moral:

True honor comes from humility, not pride.

Poem Version

Tareq the tortoise,
slow and shy,
Watched the birds
dance through the sky.

"How I wish to soar so high,"
"To rise above
and learn to fly!"

Two kind geese
came gliding low,
They greeted him
with hearts aglow.

"Each has a gift,"
said wise Bashir,
"Allah made all with roles so clear."

But Tareq dreamed of grander things,
Of sky-bound praise
and borrowed wings.

"Take a stick,"
he said one day,
"Fly with me—I'll bite and stay."

"But promise this,"
sweet Basma warned,
"No words aloud must be performed."

He bit the stick,
the geese took flight, Together rose—
a wondrous sight!

The people gasped,
their eyes grew wide,
"A flying tortoise!"
they all cried.

And pride took root
in Tareq's chest,
He longed to shout
above the rest.

"It was my idea!"
he tried to say—
But opened his mouth and fell away.

Down he tumbled,
spinning fast,
Until he landed with a crash.

The geese flew down
with gentle grace,
And found him dazed in sandy place.

"You broke your word and let go pride,"
"And nearly lost your life," they sighed.

Tareq wept
and bowed his head,
"Forgive me for the words I said."

"Now I know
to be content,
And thank Allah for what He sent."

REFLECTIONS

Why did Tareq want to fly with the birds?

What warning did the geese give him before the flight?

What lesson did Tareq learn after his fall?

What does the Qur'an say about arrogance and showing off?

How can we stay humble even when others admire us?

[illegible]

DEAR ALLAH,

This image shows a blank sheet of white paper with horizontal ruling lines. The lines are evenly spaced and extend across the width of the page. There are approximately 20 lines visible. The paper has a slightly textured appearance.

SINCERELY,
